Location

New Westminster, once the capital of British Columbia, is located at the geographic centre of the Greater Vancouver Regional District. It is bordered by the Fraser River (Surrey) to the south, Burnaby to the northwest, and Coquitlam to the east. New Westminster has seen significant population growth in recent years, and is now home to 70,100 residents and houses over 1.3 million square feet of office space.

Subject Property

Built in 1890, Begbie Court was the original courthouse for New Westminster, and is valued as one of the most significant institutional projects within the City. The distinctive three-storey red brick and stone Romanesque Revival building is symbolic for being the centre point of the City when it was named the first capital of BC and a prominent commercial centre within the Fraser Valley.
